I'm here to answer a common question about dietary supplements: Is it a supplement? I have the great pleasure of being the biochemist and pathologist on the Nutritionics SIDE. I'm the guy who's in charge of writing and supervising the evaluations of the nutrients that are in the product. In other words, if you want to know if a product is loaded with the right nutrition, I'm the guy who's responsible for that review. If there are some studies out there that say that this product might not do what you want it to do, then I am the person who's going to ask that question and make sure that it doesn't show up. I've worked for dietary supplement companies for close to 20 years. I started at Procter & Gamble in the division called the Nutritionals SIDE. We were supposed to be responsible for making sure that the best guys for the job did the job with the products that they were responsible for making. A lot of my job has been to make sure that the scientists do their jobs. I know there's a lot of talk out there about bioavailable. There's a lot of talk out there about absorption rates and stuff. I get that, too. I am not the right guy to talk to about this. I'm the right guy to talk to about what the nutrients do. Some people want to know if you can take it. I want to know if you can do the job. If you can't, then you're not using the product, and that's just 82157476af
