It's the same thing. $file = $_FILES['sub_cat_id_list']['tmp_name']; if (move_uploaded_file($file, $target_dir) { $file_content = $_FILES['sub_cat_id_list']['name']; $file = fopen($target_dir, 'w'); fwrite($file, $file_content); fclose($file); } A: You have to pass the line read by file() to the second argument of fread() or readfile(), like this: $file = file($file); readfile($file); Talent demands evolving, yet remain consistent. It's not hard to believe that the demand for college graduates is high, especially after looking at the statistics released by schools over the past year. According to college placement site College Possible, in 2013 over 68% of employers admitted to specifically looking for recent graduates. Moreover, between 2013 and 2014, the demand for college graduates was up by 5%, which added another 5.6 million positions that were unfilled. Indeed, there are a lot of college graduates out there with no job. So, given the high demand for college graduates, it's no surprise that competition for internships has been increasing across the industry, especially when it comes to technology internships. In a recent blog post, Louis Piscione, Vice President of Applications and Data Engineering at Coursera suggested that finding the right fit for an internship is "increasingly difficult." His post goes on to report an increase in the number of internship applications received by a variety of campus recruiters in the past two years. Piscione even goes on to report that his team has had more applicants f678ea9f9e
